From Cairo to Luxor, in Upper Egypt, is a dusty Journey of a day's length.
Nearly 500 miles of the Nile valley is traversed and the view of the green fields and the brown sands makes a fine spectacle. The contrasting colors fields and the brown sands makes a fine spectacle. The contrasting colors in the clear atmosphere of Egypt are specially notable. The Nile is the great sight, teeming with river-craft of all description, steambeats, sailboats and row-boats, its banks througed with carvans of camels and droves of donkeys, the irrigation machinery of ancient type on every hand, one never tires of studying the unfamiliar scene.

The contracting colors are fine to the captives clearly identify them as Hebrews. The goddess which Shishak worshipped appears on the same wall, bolding a club, bow and quiver and leading five rows of captives with cords.
